Tate Tower developers win planning appeal

A 20-STOREY residential and commercial skyscraper is set to be built next to Tate Modern in Hopton Street after troubled developers London Town plc won their planning appeal.

The plans – vociferously opposed by Bankside residents – were rejected by Southwark Council in October last year.

Unless there is a legal challenge to the validity of the decision this month, the scheme consisting of 19 flats, 9 key worker units, restaurant and office space will go ahead. As we went to press opponents were due to meet to consider any last minute moves.

John Dodwell, Finance Director of London Town, said: "I am delighted by the successful outcome to the planning inquiry and pay tribute to the hard work of our professional advisors. As the joint venture company which owns the site is treated in the London Town consolidated accounts as a quasi subsidiary, the underlying value of the Hopton Street development is incorporated in the 2002 London Town Group accounts. The 2002 accounts were prepared on the basis that planning permission for the development would be obtained."

In September 2001 Tate director Nicholas Serota, commenting on the original 32 storey plans, described the development as "an opportunistic attempt to cash in for private gain on the public benefits that have been created" in recent years on Bankside, dismissing the inclusion of affordable housing in the plans as a "cynical move".

Architecture critic Rowan Moore, writing in the Evening Standard, says that "developers are treating the Tate's boost to the area as a Klondike, to be mined for all it is worth" and adds that the tower will "blight the approach to the museum, and will obstruct the views and daylight of people who live nearby".

Moore also described the planning inquiry as a "magnificent parade of specious argument".

The site is a former Victorian stables which until recently was occupied by David Mussett paper merchants.

Support for Jeffrey John*MEMBERS OF the congregation at Southwark Cathedral have shown strong support for Canon Jeffrey John who is due to become Bishop of Reading.

Canon John has been criticised for his views on the Church's sexuality policy and, although a celibate priest, for being gay.

However, television news camera crews at the cathedral on Sunday morning found only praise for Canon John from those entering the cathedral. He is known as a Biblical scholar and a popular preacher.

Canon John, who leaves Southwark Cathedral next month, will be consecrated Bishop in Westminster Abbey in October.

Royal Street
plans launched*PLANS FOR the redevelopment of Royal Street opposite St Thomas' Hospital have been published. The Royal Street Partnership of Taylor Woodrow Developments and Genesis Housing Group has devised the key worker accommodation for both sides of Royal Street to be branded Founder's Place. The street once linked Rochester Place, the Bishop of Rochester's London house, with Stangate Stairs on the river. The site, which once included prefabs and a school, would embrace private housing and a Ronald McDonald House built on the former Lambeth Palace kitchen garden just north of Archbishop's Park. The Russian Leader was there to visit Geraldine Mary Harmsworth Park where he laid a wreath at the Soviet World War II Memorial. Entry to the park for other visitors was by way of an airport-style security arch due to tight security imposed following the weekend intruder at Windsor Castle.

Later in the week the Russian Leader sailed down the Thames on the Royal Nore from the Savoy Pier to Greenwich. On board was the Duke of York accompanied by the Royal Watermen in full State livery. People on Bankside and the Millennium Bridge were taken by surprise as the fast moving flotilla approached.Earlier in the day Mrs Putina had sailed down the river on the Royal Nore looking at landmarks including Shakespeare's Globe and Southwark Cathedral.Blackfriars

South Bank TV war: Terry & Gaby versus Philip & Fern

FIVE'S NEW daily magazine is being broadcast from County Hall on the South Bank just yards away from the studios of ITV1's rival This Morning show.

Terry Wogan and Gaby Roslin's daily show is being broadcast from a studio on the third floor of County Hall, above the new Saatchi Gallery, with the Houses of Parliament providing the backdrop.

The show features celebrity interviews, Johnny Ball in the studio and roving reporter Danny McCall. Guests have included Jonathan Ross.

100 editions of the Chris Evans-produced show have been commissioned by Five, though it's not been an immediate hit with viewers – the duo pulled a high of 300,000 viewers on 2 June, with figures fluctuating between 100,000 and 200,000 ever since.

Terry and Gaby are competing directly with Granada's established This Morning show on ITV1 – presented by Philip Schofield and Fern Britten from the nearby London Television Centre in Upper Ground – though Granada producers deny that they are aimed at the same audience.

The Terry and Gaby Show, broadcast live from 11am to 12 noon Monday to Friday, has a live audience. Free tickets (over 18s only) are available from terryandgabyaudience@mtv.tv

Golden Jubilee Bridge

PRINCESS ALEXANDRA is opening the new Hungerford Bridge footbridges on Wednesday 2 July. The two walkways were to have been called the Jubilee Bridge but at the request of the Queen they will be known as the Golden Jubilee Bridge as the work was completed in her Golden Jubilee year.

The Queen is unable to undertake the engagement herself as she will be in Scotland. Afterwards the Princess is due to visit the Royal Festival Hall.

The bridge ceremony is being held on the upstream side of Hungerford Bridge where the walkway offers the first opportunity to enjoy the western view since a temporary crossing was attached for the South Bank's Festival of Britain in 1951.

However, the official bridge naming comes as a blow to the Jubilee Bridge Trust which is planning a walkway attached to Cannon Street railway bridge. The southern end would meet Bankside opposite Vinopolis.

As funding is not yet in place it has been suggested that the Cannon Street walkway may have to be called the Diamond Jubilee Bridge. The next jubilee is due to be held in 2012.

Southwark Street shops to close

A PARADE of shops in Southwark Street is due to close this month to make way for demolition teams.

The shops, on the north side of the street near the Great Guildford Street junction, are part of the vast St Christopher House, which is being redeveloped by Land Securities. The £220m plan, includes pedestrian-only passages with vistas, a supermarket and a community centre.

Shops and businesses closing include the Southwark News newsagents and a dentist's surgery. The picture-framer has already closed. Many staff are retiring but the take-away bar is relocating to Spain.

Although the Waterloo Cars taxi firm is due to move to nearby Southwark Bridge Road there is concern that BT has so far refused to allow its vital phone number to move with the business. There is also disappointment that existing businesses are not getting first refusal on the new shops planned on the site.

Work has already begun on dismantling the western end of the building which once housed parts of the Department of the Environment, the Department of Transport and the Foreign Office.

The final use for the now empty office was as a film set for Prime Suspect. The scheme is due for completion in 2006. Meanwhile the development's architects Allies and Morrison has designed its own office opposite in Southwark Street.

book review Walks In & Around London

THE GEORGE Inn in Borough High Street is the excuse to include SE1 in a new National Trust book of walks.

Walks In & Around London by Peter Wenham (NT £9.99) takes a National Trust property in the capital or home counties as a focus for a gentle walking route in the vicinity.

The central London walk links Borough with the tiny Blewcoat School in St James's making a 7 mile circular walk. The outward route is down Nancy's Steps and along Bankside to cross the Millennium Bridge for a view of SE1.

The return is over Lambeth Bridge and back along the main Thames Path to the Borough's galleried NT pub which looks magnificent in the photograph over two pages. The pictures, some by the author, are the book's main attraction.

Many of the other walks are by the Thames upstream and easily reached from Waterloo.

PARK STREET CLOSURES
The Borough Café has shut after 41 years in business. Maria Moruzzi, the second generation to run the Park Street café known to film stars, closed the door last month. Nearby Petit Robert restaurant, owned by Robert Didier, has also closed. Both businesses had been operating under the shadow of plans for Thameslink 2000.

LONDON DUCK TOURS
London Frog Tours has changed its name to London Duck Tours. The explanation is that the amphibious craft, first used in D-Day landings, were first called DUKWs. The yellow Frogs, or Ducks, are stabled opposite Lambeth North Station and enter the Thames at the drawdock alongside the M16 building.

PIZZA EXPRESS OPENS
Pizza Express has opened on Bankside. The restaurant is occupying two floors of Benbow House between New Globe Walk and Bear Gardens opposite Shakespeare's Globe. Over its first weekend trading many customers took advantage of the good weather to dine on the terrace. This is the fourth Pizza Express branch in SE1.

UNICORN GO-AHEAD
The go-ahead has been given for the Unicorn Children's Theatre in Tooley Street. The £11m project has recently received £1m from the London Development Agency which matches funds raised by Unicorn supporters. Chairman Ronald Spinney says that a further £2m is expected to be raised by the 2005 opening.

Merry Wives of Windsor at the Old Vic

MISTRESS ALICE Ford and Mistress Meg Page are the knowing Merry Wives who scheme to test their husbands' fidelity and to marry off delectable daughter Anne Page to the best suitor. Apart from the husbands the male roles are comic led by the portly but vain Sir John Falstaff, down on his luck and seeking a rich wife. The post-war austerity setting did not really add much to the production except for the 1940s costumes of the wives. The plot and counterplots develop carefully like a house of cards and the whole collapses in the second half with a roistering encounter at Halloween in Windsor's woods of all the characters with elves, fairies and witches and a disguised Falstaff. He is ridiculed, suitors find they have been tricked and Anne Page is carried off by her true love. Finally the husbands are reunited with their Merry Wives and one supposes they live happily ever after – or until the next whiff of suspicion of infidelity.

WIN with inSE1

Win a pair of tickets to Everest at the BFI London IMAX Cinema

Fifty years on from the first ascent of Mount Everest, this film is the dramatic true story of a team of climbers who found hope, strength and triumph in the wake of tragedy. Everest takes audiences across creaking icefalls and gaping chasms, up dangerous, towering cliffs, through a harrowing rescue and into the danger zone of oxygen-thin altitude. Narrated by Liam Neeson and with music by George Harrison this is a film to move and inspire.

We have 10 pairs of tickets to give away to our readers. For your chance to win, simply send your answer to: Everest Competition, in SE1, 27 Blackfriars Road, London SE1 8NY (or email everest@inse1.co.uk) before 5pm Thursday 17 July with the answer to this question:

In what year was the first ascent of Everest?

The winners will be drawn from the correct answers received. The editor's decision is final. No correspondence will be entered into.

exhibition review

Suspendu at f a projects

THE BEAR Gardens was once a theatre and a bear pit. Now the very site is occupied by f a projects which attracted a large crowd, including Sir Nick Serota, to the champagne launch of Suspendu.

This exhibition, part of the Made in Paris season sponsored by the Institut Français, brings together photography, video, film and sound work. This month's entertainment is very slow moving, and even thought provoking, compared with the previous offerings here. Fiorenza Menini's film Untitled records in real time the interval of 28 minutes between the fall of the first and second Twin Towers on 11 September. Filmed by chance from Brooklyn in a single take,
the image is slowly obscured
by smoke and dust. Guillaume Leblon's silent film April Street takes the viewer slowly down the flooded River Somme past half-immersed houses and trees.

It's a bare gallery but it takes at least an hour to appreciate the exhibits.

Southwark Cathedral's charity outreach

EACH YEAR Southwark Cathedral allocates 10% of its regular giving to development schemes around the world from women's literacy projects in Bangladesh,
the Spafford Children's Centre
in Jerusalem to HIV/AIDS projects in Africa. In September the cathedral will again be considering the allocation for a variety of local charitable organisations. Of particular interest are projects working with SE1 people, young or old, black and white, to add to the quality of life through education, life skills support, visits etc.
Projects which have benefitted in previous years include the Borough Music School, Charterhouse-in-Southwark, Walworth Garden Farm and the Waterloo Action Centre.

If you know of or are involved with a local project please write with supporting information, including details of any specific funding requests, and charity details to Canon Bruce Saunders, Southwark Cathedral,
Montague Place, SE1 9DA.

Environmentally friendly fashion

WE ALL love clothes. There is nothing quite like the frisson of a new outfit carried home in triumph after a long day's shopping in the West End. But sadly there is a downside to this. The bleaches and dyes used by the fashion industry contaminate the environment. Cotton crops need lots of water, a precious commodity in the Third World. And the image makers have hooked young people into designer labels to an alarming degree.

However, textile artist and fashion designer Lauren Shanley at Gabriel's Wharf has a radically different approach. Her clothes are not only beautiful but environmentally friendly as well. Lauren uses recycled fabrics and clothes and even furnishing fabrics to make her unique outfits. Her clothes have an organic sculptural feel and come in beautiful earth shades of moss green, crimson and deep blue. Many of the garments are embroidered and oversewn by hand by Lauren to an extraordinary degree. Buttons are recycled and are used for her clothes and for stunning jewellery also on sale at her tiny shop. Lauren's customers range from secretaries at IPC to people in theatre and television. They happily volunteer to be models when Lauren stages a fashion show.

"I am not interested in disposable fashion, but in timeless fashion" says Lauren who has built a successful business around this philosophy. Other fashion designers could certainly take a lead from this remarkable woman.

Southwark's Street's vast St Christopher House has been the perfect set for Prime Suspect. Filming in the corridors of the former government offices took place last month. Today's government buildings tend to be open plan and more informal. More discreet was the filming for Trauma in Lower Marsh late on a Sunday night. Colin Firth was seen walking through the empty market.

Evidence that SE1 is now established as London's arts quarter can be found by a spot check in The Times. Five out of six stories in its Arts Briefing were from SE1. One highlighted the new theatre venue in Mandela Way at the far south-east corner of SE1 and best known for the sorting office. Now the RSC has teamed up with Cardboard Citizens, the homeless people's theatre company, to present Pericles there.

* * *

The opening of the Hungerford Bridge walkways, to be called the Golden Jubilee Bridge, raises questions about maintenance. The big clean-up was not just in honour of Princess Alexandra. The new bridges had become very dirty with the deck covered in chewing gum. The lifts have become unpleasant. Glass only looks good if kept clean. A bigger operation was required to remove the graffiti from the historic brick piers of the former suspension bridge.
