Octavia Hill's Red Cross Garden reopens

Red Cross Garden has opened after a £500,000 restoration made possible by Lottery Heritage funding.

The Victorian garden in Redcross Way was first laid out in 1887 on the site of a derelict paper factory by social reformer and National Trust founder Octavia Hill. The backdrop to the garden is a row of Octavia Hill cottages.

Work started in January when Gillian Darley, vice-president of the Octavia Hill Society, was present.

The project is being managed by Bankside Open Spaces Trust who hope that people will enjoy watching the garden mature over the coming years. There is a fountain, pond and seats. A community gardener based at Red Cross Garden, and assisted by volunteers, is taking care of the re-greening.

"We shall be adding more plants in the autumn, in particular planting the Octavia Hill rose in her honour as she did so much to bring beauty and nature to the city" says project manager Verena Cotton.

South Bank glows again

New lighting runs along the South Bank riverside from the IBM building to Blackfriars Bridge.

The scheme, switched on by Mayor of London Ken Livingstone, lights up both the trees and the swags attached to the refurbished Sturgeon lamps, dating from 1878, on the river wall. The trees have twinkling blue and white light using light emitting diodes which have a long life and low power requirements.

Ted Inman of the South Bank Employers' Group said: "The aim of this project is not only to make a stroll along the river even more enjoyable but also to help reduce fear of crime which is a key priority for South Bank Employers' Group."

Most of the light is cast on to the riverside walkway in order to improve the safety and comfort of visitors whilst ensuring minimal light pollution.

The project is funded by Waterloo Project Board, Transport for London and Southwark Council and commissioned and managed by the South Bank Employers' Group working in partnership with Coin Street Community Builders, Lambeth Council, the Metropolitan Police and English Heritage.

Festival Riverside to open

Wagamama, EAT, Giraffe and Strada are due open alongside the new Foyles bookshop on the South Bank's Festival Riverside early this month.

Also now open is MDC Music & Movies shop. Most of the Royal Festival Hall will be closed for a full two years following the discovery of asbestos. The 54-year-old hall, built for the Festival of Britain, closed last month for refurbishment but was due to reopen in early 2007 after a £91 million refurbishment. Now the planned opening concert series, which was to have included Daniel Barenboim conducting the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, has been cancelled.

It is feared that the promised National Lottery cash, the government grant and a £5 million donation from Vivien Duffield will be unlikely to be enough to cover the rising costs of the arts centre's relaunch.

Little Dorrit church set for refurb

St George the Martyr Church in Borough High Street is to close this month for a £3.6 million restoration.

The announcement was made by Parish Clerk Ken Hayes during a reception at the church to thank donors including the Corporation of London. St George's is one of the City's ten benefices.

Also announced was a plan to set up a music teaching facility at St George's to be overseen by director of music David Adkins. Students will be able to study for GCSE and A Level music exams. Lessons will be held at St John's Waterloo until St George's reopens.

Southwark historian Stephen Humphry, delivering a lecture on the historic church's long history, claimed that it was one of the oldest St George's churches in London. He also recalled Southwark's long association with the City of London and its livery companies which in the past had contributed towards maintaining the church fabric.

In addition to Charles Dickens, who lived in the parish and set part of Little Dorrit in the church, the great names associated with the church include General Monck, who came for his secret wedding during Cromwell's rule, and Nahum Tate, author of the Christmas carol While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night, who is buried there.

Guests were asked not to walk down the main aisle due to the unstable ceiling.

£500,000 needs to be raised to restore the organ, retune the peal of bells and convert the crypt which may become a restaurant.

The St George's congregation will be worshipping in Guy's Hospital Chapel during the closure of their church building.

It's the week of Jonathan's 30th Birthday. His girlfriend wants to get married and move out of the city - Tick... His best friend has bought a BMW and is moving uptown - Tick... and Jon's waiting tables, trying to write the great American musical, and feeling the pressure to choose between holding onto dreams or selling out for money - Boom! Jonathan Larson, who tragically died of an aortic aneurysm shortly before the opening of his huge smash hit Rent, first conceived of Tick, Tick...Boom! in 1990 as a one man musical monologue about a young composer on the brink of turning 30. David Auburn (who also wrote Proof) has taken Larson's multi-character musical monologue and turned it into a show for 3 actors portraying numerous characters.

THEATRE REVIEW

A Midsummer Night's Drink

The Mug House, 1 Tooley Street (under London Bridge)

The Mug House under London Bridge may be a surprise to visitors with its 17th-century atmosphere only broken by the rolling news screen in one corner.

But on Mondays and Wednesdays one's attention will be drawn to an exuberant actress in costume welcoming you to A Midsummer Night's Drink.

A troupe of four actors from Streetwise Productions take the drinkers on a walk around Bankside stopping to perform snatches of Shakespeare interspersed with much banter. The four are Burbage (Joe Lombardelli whose credits include the Young Vic), Vivienne Smailes (Helen Herman), Dorcas Decker (Philippa Tatham) and Autolycus Bartholomew Schmit (Bode Olaleye).

Aloof Burbage is the great actor Richard Burbage whose father helped to dismantle the Globe in Shoreditch and bring the timbers to Bankside. Vivienne is a young simple actress/prostitute and Dorcas is a more experienced actress/prostitute.

Pickpocket Autolycus

acts as ringmaster leading the underground theatre company just ahead of the law and taking bets on bear baiting in the Bear Garden.

The asides are packed with historical information which appear to be well-researched and are delivered with careful timing and huge energy. The players remain in character throughout as they lead the way "through Winchester Palace" into the Clink and via an inn to Mr Shakespeare's theatre.

It's a fast moving 90 minutes which can sometimes be longer depending on numbers and weather. We were there for their first wet night but the show went on.

This summer's acclaimed Canterbury Tales, performed at locations around the Borough, had too short a run. Those who missed Chaucer should book a place on the Midsummer Night's Drink tour.

LOCAL HISTORY

Tracing the history of Neckinger Mills

Trace is a site-specific installation across the first floor windows of Neckinger Mills in Abbey Street recalling the female workers who played a key role in the building's past.

Trace is the culmination of a two-year initiative conceived and managed by artist Alison Marchant. The work reveals the otherwise hidden and displaced identities of industrial female workers. The research phase of this project began at Southwark Local History Library in Borough High Street, where Marchant discovered that the current Neckinger Mills building, formerly Bevington & Sons Ltd, produced light leathers for shoes and fancy goods. Women have always worked in finishing the skins and lime painting, and it was said that the fish oil used in the glazing process enhanced Bermondsey women's hair and skin. Bevington's Neckinger mills opened in 1801 and continued production until 1981.

• Trace can be seen in Abbey Street until 30 October, with artist-led evening tours by appointment (020 8257 0589/07747 134 064).

EXHIBITION REVIEW

Cloud & Vision

Museum of Garden History

Cloud & Vision: William Blake in Lambeth recalls his ten years as a resident of Waterloo.

His productive years in SE1 are the inspiration for twelve artists exhibiting at the Museum of Garden History which is a short walk from where Blake lived in Hercules Road. Indeed he knew the museum building as St Mary-at-Lambeth parish church.

Hanging above the former baptistry is Andy Harper's An Orrery for Other Worlds. Nearby is Phil Coy's autocue showing the words of Jerusalem projected back to front to recall Blake's printing press.

But the star of the show is a real printing press brought up from Sussex and being used to demonstrate the methods used by Blake to produce his words and images. This Floating Press is today connected to a virtual press on the web.

Surprisingly, the Cloud & Vision catalogue (£5) is an important part of the celebration and contains material not on show. Particularly fascinating is a map of Blake's Waterloo showing Cut Throat Lane zig-zagging across the site of the planned Founder's Place development. Michael Phillips and Jon Newman contribute essays on Blake's SE1.

BOOK REVIEW

Sally Gardner
Orion • £8.99
Buy this book online at www.inSE1.co.uk/books

I Coriander

I Coriander is a fairy story set in Thames-side London during the harsh Cromwellian years.

The very striking cover of the novel is enticing for it depicts the City from above Bankside. Indeed every section is heralded by a detail from Wenceslas Hollar's celebrated 1647 Long View of London showing the panorama from the tower of what we now call Southwark Cathedral.

But this is not a Bankside story for Coriander lives on the north bank in a riverside house where the laundry is sent to a Southwark wash house. The nearby Globe has been closed by the Puritans whose extreme Protestantism and military dictatorship bring great misery even to the home of someone endowed with money and magic.

Sally Gardner was inspired to write about London under a strict religious regime after staying with a Muslim fundamentalist family in Morocco. This led her to research the Pool of London in the mid 17th century.

Part of the tale takes place in a tailor's on London Bridge where passing sheep sometimes break free. The weather seems always to be snowy and the Thames below frozen hard. The bells of St Magnus on the bridge's north end compete with those of St Saviour's and St George's to the south.

Promoted as "the year's most spellbinding children's novel", I Coriander certainly holds one's attention, and is strong on detail and description.

BOOK REVIEW

The Longest Night

Gavin Mortimer
Weidenfeld & Nicolson • £18.99
Buy this book online at www.inSE1.co.uk/books

London experienced terrible German air raids on 10-11 May 1941 when 400 bombers headed up the Thames to change the capital for ever.

Author Gavin Mortimer gives a graphic account having traced survivors who knew the familiar smells of Hartley's jam and Sarson's vinegar. The characters include Gladys Jenner who worked at Peek Freans and three firefighters: Fred Cockett at Waterloo fire station, Emily Macfarlane at the Elephant & Castle and fellow firewoman Bobbie Tanner at Dockhead.

That weekend Lambeth Palace crypt was home to 200 people but they were soon evacuated into the street when the upstairs caught fire and no fire engine was available. The emergency services were safeguarding St Thomas' and fighting to save shops in The Cut by pumping dirty Thames water inland. Firefighters at the Elephant were surrounded by walls of fire with only one exit. There it was again the rising tide which eventually allowed much needed water to flow down Newington Causeway past Zettlers pools building and on to the remains of Spurgeon's Tabernacle.

Gavin Mortimer puts SE1's darkest hour in context by telling of the simultaneous battle at Westminster where the Commons chamber was lost and the City where the landmark churches including St Mary-le-Bow fell to fire.

This is a timely book which helps one to understand those who invoke the blitz spirit as London faces terrorist bombs.
