Arts and culture

For the first half of the year the Imperial War Museum is shut to visitors whilst building work is carried out in preparation for 2014's World War I centenary. The National Theatre will stage performances in a temporary auditorium on Theatre Square during the refurbishment of the Cottesloe. In the autumn the Rambert Dance Company's new studio is due to open on Upper Ground. Tate Modern's Lichtenstein exhibition (February-May) will be one of the highlights of the year. Southbank Centre is staging a year-long festival – The Rest is Noise – telling the story of the 20th century through 250 events. SbC's summer season is a Festival of Neighbourhood featuring Elephant & Castle as well as communities around the world.

Visitor attractions

The View from the Shard, which opens on 1 February, will usurp the London Eye as the best vantage point to survey SE1. For those who prefer a subterranean experience, the London Dungeon reopens on 1 February in the bowels of County Hall on the South Bank.

Local politics

As the four-year electoral cycle enters its final year, local politics will become more febrile. The impact of the coalition government's benefit reforms will be a major part of the local political debate, as will ongoing controversies about affordable housing. In Lambeth residents will be looking to new leader Lib Peck to explain the 'cooperative council' programme. The future of Living Space and Waterloo Library will be important test cases.

Transport

The redevelopment of London Bridge Station is the big transport story of the year. During 2013 the scaffolding and hoardings should finally disappear from the new Blackfriars Station which has now been open for more than a year. The fleet of hydrogen buses used on route RV1 will at last be completed, with diesel vehicles almost banished from the route. The first electric buses in London will also arrive on the streets of SE1 this summer when a trial begins on routes 507 and 521.

Police & crime

Both Southwark and Lambeth have recently gained new borough police commanders who will be finding their feet in 2013 at a time of radical change for the Met. Front counters at Southwark and Kennington police stations are likely to be under threat and the new 'local policing model' will change the way that safer neighbourhood teams work.

Fire brigade

The London Fire Brigade HQ in Union Street will be the focus for protest against plans to close a number of fire stations – including Southwark.

Health service

Plans to merge Guy's and St Thomas' NHS Foundation Trust with two other south London NHS trusts under the King's Health Partners umbrella are likely to be the subject of public debate and consultation this year. Look out for the Evelina Children's Hospital at St Thomas' gaining a more distinctive identity.

Planning & development

This month Southwark's planning committee will consider Lend Lease's outline planning application for the Heygate Estate redevelopment. In Lambeth, the planning application for the Shell Centre site will be decided this year. There are also major schemes in the works along Albert Embankment. Next month a public inquiry will be held into plans for the redevelopment of the former London Fire Brigade HQ near Lambeth Bridge. Other significant schemes likely to be announced this year include the refurbishment of the Queen Elizabeth Hall and Hayward Gallery at Southbank Centre. 2013 will be make or break for the neighbourhood plans being drawn up for Bankside and Bermondsey. Southwark Council will consult on its draft local list of buildings of historic or architectural significance.

Hotels

New openings include the Shangri-la at the Shard (May/June) and the Premier Inn at the former General Lying-in Hospital (March). Several existing hotels are planning extensions, including the Mercure London City and Holiday Inn Express in Southwark Street, the Tune Hotel at Lambeth North and the Eurotraveller in Old Kent Road.

Education

The opening of the new Oasis Academy South Bank secondary school will be a key event. Plans for a new sixth-form free school run by King's College London will also move forward. Last year Southwark College was absorbed by Lewisham College and the combined institution will announce its new name. London South Bank University's Enterprise Centre at St George's Circus is due for completion this year. Look out for plans for a private sixth-form college near Westminster Bridge.

Restaurants

The big event is the opening of the restaurants at the Shard, tentatively scheduled for April. A cover charge is intended to deter sightseers. Down at ground level Tom Sellers will open his Story restaurant on the site of the former public toilets in Tooley Street. The Breakfast Club is due to open in Southwark Street.

The Millennium Bridge will temporarily close for a scheduled inspection from Monday 7 to Friday 11 January. Works will be carried out daily between 10am and 4pm when the deck of the bridge will be lifted to allow inspection of all parts of the structure. A specialist rope access team and engineers will survey the towers, cables and bridge piers and will also re-install some dampers which were removed last year for testing.

Frozen LondonThis new exhibition at London Metropolitan Archives (21 January to 25 April) will explore the impact some of the most severe winters ever recorded in London had on its residents between 1683 and 1895. It will look at the different Frost Fairs that took place on the River Thames and its many sites and attractions. www.cityoflondon.gov.uk/lmaLondon EyeThe EDF Energy London Eye reopens after its annual New Year maintenance closure on Saturday 19 January. www.londoneye.comGolden Yogi

times vary; £22 (conc £15)

The Unicorn Theatre's Christmas show is a lively adaptation by Jemma Kennedy of Mark Twain's classic story of confused identities. Set in a Tudor London, a young street urchin Tom Canty has a chance meeting with the heir to the throne, Prince Edward VI and by pure coincidence they find they look almost identical. The Prince and The Pauper is a classic story of what happens when two boys trade clothes one afternoon and as a result trade lives as well; Tom Canty is forced into a world of royal intrigue and courtly power, while Edward is cast down to the mercy of blaggards and thieves. At once brilliantly comic, touching and true, this is a fast paced and rousing adventure with music for all the family. Real life twins Danielle and Nichole Bird will play the Tom Canty and Edward VI. The versatile cast also includes Nicholas Boulton as Henry VIII/John Canty, Richard Evans as Father Andrew, Jonathan Glew as Hereford, Jake Harders as Miles Hendon/Busker, Jason Morell as Bet/Elizabeth and Katherine Toy as Mrs Canty.

Phil Willmott directs the modern world premiere of Shakespeare's disputed comedy. Whether it's a Shakespeare collaboration or not this rollicking romantic comedy plucked from the Shakespeare Apocrypha should brighten up anyone's winter blues. With a host of colourful characters, a riot of mistaken identity and all the joys and perils of young love, this delightful romp through high and low society, town and country, England and Denmark, culminates in a finale every bit as pleasing and problematic as anything in the acknowledged Shakespeare canon.

UNITED MICRO KINGDOMS (UMK): A DESIGN FICTION

UmK presents multiple perspectives on a fictional future for the United Kingdom, as imagined by designers and educators Dunne & Raby. The exhibition sees England devolved into four self-contained counties, each free to experiment with governance, economy and lifestyle. These 'live laboratories' interrogate the cultural and ethical impact of existing and new technologies and how they alter the way we live. Anthony Dunne and Fiona Raby use elements of industrial design, architecture, politics, science and sociology to provoke debate around the power and potential of design. UmK challenges assumptions about how products and services are made and used, through reinterpretations of the car and other transport systems.

ART IN THE WILD

Exhibition extended by popular demand. Wildlife photographer Roger Hooper has once again captured some of the world's most endangered species in a stunning new collection of images. His colour and monochrome photography uncovers dramatic scenes of wild animals in their natural territory, depicting the extraordinary beauty and frailty of our world so often forgotten in our day-to-day lives. Revealing a particular love for big cats, Hooper's latest exhibition features images of majestic lions and tigers on the prowl, as well as leopard and lion cubs protected by their mothers. Passionate about wildlife, Hooper works closely with the WWF UK. He has photographed many of its projects and his images have featured in a variety of WWF publications to promote their cause.

FIGURATIVELY SPEAKING

Group exhibition based on the subject of numbers in contemporary art. As the title suggests, the exhibition could be mistaken for a traditional group show of reclining nudes and other effigies rendered perhaps in bronze or charcoal.

However the title's double entendre reveals the simple and complex use of numerals. The artists adopt a universal language that the viewer will visually decipher and conceptually decode. The works in the exhibition range from basic counting systems to technological advancements that comment on the role of numerals within a developed society.

WILLIAM KENTRIDGE: I AM NOT ME, THE HORSE IS NOT MINE

The Tanks
A major video installation by South African artist William Kentridge recently donated to Tate is displayed for the first time in the UK. The piece comprises eight six-minute films which share one soundtrack. The films are projected simultaneously across the walls of the tank and each is played on a continuous loop to create an immersive audio-visual environment, which resists the establishment of a single narrative. Each short film contributes layers to a story that references Russian modernism, from Soviet film of the 1920s and 1930s to the calamitous end of the Russian avant-garde.

RASHEED ARAEEN: ZERO TO INFINITY

The Tanks
Rasheed Araeen's dynamic work Zero to Infinity (1968, 2007) consists of one hundred uniform lattice-construction cubes, initially arranged in a 10 by 10 grid. Invited guests were encouraged by the artist to move the units in the gallery around, disrupting the uniform display to leave the cubes in a more complex and spontaneous arrangement. The new configuration of the cubes is shown alongside photographs documenting their movement. This manipulation of the elements carries the implication of infinite variation and challenges the idea of the artwork as a fixed object conceived by a single individual.

ANTONY GORMLEY: MODEL

Antony Gormley's vast new work is both sculpture and building, human in form, but at no point visible as a total figure. In the corridor space, new sculptures built of solid iron blocks appear to prop up the architecture, articulating a corner or lying flat on the ground, testing the bounding condition of their environment.

Waterloo Sights & Sounds

Back to the 70s as London Dungeon prepares to move

An intergenerational community project to explore local history and heritage in Waterloo launches this month thanks to a Heritage Lottery Fund grant.

Social enterprise Coin Street Community Builders received the lottery funding for Waterloo Sights and Sounds which will investigate and document changes to the urban and social landscape using photographs, oral histories, audio description and soundscape.

"There will be a variety of talks, walks and workshops looking at archaeology, architecture and community involvement in the area," said Laura Reynolds, community programmes manager at Coin Street. "Using digital media as our main exploration tools, we aim to reach people of all ages and backgrounds, creating accessible, interactive resources for all."

Launching on Wednesday 9 January with a steering group meeting at the Coin Street neighbourhood centre (see listing on page 3), Waterloo Sights and Sounds will be centred on community involvement, with participants given the opportunity to help plan, develop and deliver activities from the start.

The project culminates in an interactive exhibition in the autumn which will showcase research, information, memories and soundscapes aimed at everyone from children through to older people.

Selected resources will be collated for use in local primary and secondary schools; findings will also be shared with the Imperial War Museum and Morley College as well as local libraries and archives.

Laura added: "We're thrilled to receive this grant – a focus on heritage is particularly important to our local community because Waterloo is a rapidly changing area with a rich and varied history, and many large-scale developments are planned for the near future."

"Like many areas of central London, it retains original buildings from historical eras including churches, factories, schools and the riverside. Exploring these will develop understanding of the processes of urban change, creating a platform for information-sharing and debate, informing future developments through knowledge of the past and how it can be recognised and used to shape the future."

Waterloo Sights and Sounds follows Coin Street's previous lottery-funded project Living Memory. Participants were keen to carry on exploring the history of SE1. Jennifer Holroyd said: "I found Living Memory a wonderful way of getting to know about local history, contributing to the community and meeting new people of all ages."

Other Waterloo Sights and Sounds activities this month include a photographic workshop (see listing on page 3) and a visit to the Southwark Local History Library (see listing on page 4).

The London Dungeon, which will close its doors on Thursday 31 January, is celebrating its last month in London Bridge with a 'back to the 70s' January sale.

The London Dungeon, which has been situated in Tooley Street for 38 years, will reinvent itself in March when it opens in its new home at County Hall on the South Bank, close to the London Eye.

To mark the end of the Tooley Street era, every Friday in January will be "Black Friday" with the first 100 tickets bought at www.thedungeons.com on 4, 11, 18, and 25 January available at the original 1974 entry price of just £3. There will also be the opportunity to pre-book for the new London Dungeon at a 25 per cent discount.

Many businesses in the railway arches at London Bridge are closing or moving as work begins on the redevelopment of the station.
